DIRECTOR'S REPORT

- Bob Richardson, Battle Ground Police Chief acknowledgment for Public Health Leadership Award

Battle Ground Police Chief Bob Richardson received the Washington State Public Health Association Public Health Leadership Award at the association's annual conference in Wenatchee.

Richardson has been a member of the Clark County Public Health Advisory Council since 2011. He advocates for public health issues before the Clark County Board of Health. He also has been a leader in addressing methamphetamine use, youth violence and stable funding for public health.

The advisory council is focusing on health impacts from Adverse Childhood Experiences (ACEs). Richardson helped the county obtain a grant from Vancouver-based Community Foundation for Southwest Washington for an upcoming pilot project on ACEs in Battle Ground. As an advocate of community-based law enforcement, Chief Richardson understands the strong connection between the work of public safety and public health. Chief Richardson accepted the award and said a few words.
